Leaves Edmonton, Alberta,
On Last 2350-Mile
Flight

TAKES OFF AT 7.40 A. M.

Confident He Will Complete
Trip Around the World
In Record Time

EDMONTON, Alberta, Canada, July 22—Halting little more than an hour to refuel his plane and stretch his legs, Wiley Post took off from the airport here today on the final 2350-mile jump to New York to complete a record-smashing round the world solo flight.

The Oklahoma aviator raised the faithful "Winnie Mae" into the air from the two-mile concrete runway at 7.40 a. m., just one hour and 27 minutes after he landed, following a flight from Fairbanks, Alaska. Post was tired, but cheerful and confident he would make the non-stop flight to New York and complete the first solo flight round the world in record time.

"With any kind of a break I should make New York in 14 hours," Post commented before he took off. "The route I will fly is about 2350 miles, but it is all down hill and I know it like a book."

Langhorne Man Under Bail; Struck Women With Auto

Frank C. Cornell, Langhorne, is under $500 bail for a further hearing on August 3rd, charged with assault and battery by automobile.

Cornell, it is stated, struck Mrs. Margaret Bahr, 25, 2048 N. 3rd street, Philadelphia, and Miss Ruth Groff, 2048 avenue and State Road, Croydon.

Earl Jenkins, Croydon, and the two women were standing talking outside of the Blue Moon Hosiery, Croydon, when Cornell, it is alleged drove his car into them. Cornell states he was endeavoring to enter the mill yard which is being picketed during a strike.

A hearing was given Cornell last night in the Municipal Building here by Justice of Peace, James Laughlin. Cornell was arrested by Constable Thomas Crawford.

Mrs. Bahr is suffering with a foot wound. Miss Groff has a wrenched knee.

Nesley Saba, Holmesburg; and Herbert Scharg, Croydon, were both held in $500 bail, charged with stoning women in the vicinity of the mill.

Amusements Attract A Big Crowd, Hospital Lawn Fete

The ferris wheel, chair plane, merry-go-round, and other amusements, as well as the wild woman, sale of goodies, and music have been enjoyed by hundreds at the Harriman Hospital lawn fete during the past three nights, and it is predicted that many more will enjoy the festivities this evening.

Last night selections were provided by the Bracken Post bugle corps and the Cadet Corps of the American Legion. The two musical groups made a splendid showing in their colorful uniforms, and were most generous with their selections.

The grown-ups, as well as tots, are taking advantage of the amusements. Tonight's attendance is expected to surpass that of previous evenings.

Boy Who Was Burned On R. R. Has Foot Amputated

One of the young fishermen who nearly had their lives snuffed out by electrocution when a fishing pole came in contact with a P. R. R. high tension wire, July 13th, had his left foot amputated yesterday back to the heel.

The one who is still on the "danger list," and who suffered loss of the member is William McElroy, 13, Corson street, who suffered burns of the right hand and left foot when the tragic accident occurred.

McElroy and his companion, Joseph Bradley, 16, Race street, it was believed for a time would improve nicely, but McElroy's recuperation proved to be slow, owing to severe burns of the skin tissues of the injured foot. The high voltage entering his right hand, left his body at the left foot, seriously burning the latter. A gangrenous condition developed, and yesterday the amputation took place. Bradley is reported as doing well.

The two youths met with their injuries when they mounted a refrigerator car after they had been fishing. The pole in McElroy's hands came in contact with the high tension wires which carry 11,000 volts. The shock threw McElroy to the top of the car, and knocked Bradley through the open hatch.

GIVE PRESIDENT SUPPORT

Washington, D. C., July 22.—An avalanche of congratulatory telegrams, phone calls and personal communications, all promising support of the President's effort to put the whole country under an agreement for higher wages and shorter working hours, continued today to pour in at the National Recovery Administration headquarters. They started coming in soon after the news went over the country. They came in at an estimated rate of six a minute, from all sources, Governors of states, heads of businesses and individuals. Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania telephoned Brigadier-General Hugh S. Johnson, administrator, that he wanted to be the first governor to get into action and that he wanted to be the first governor to get into action and that he would appeal to the governors of every state to join in making the effort a success.

First reactions from the country, it was stated, were "very favorable" as reflected at the headquarters.

The President has noticed, in connection with other encouraging factors, a gain in agricultural purchasing power within the past two months, approximately 80 per cent. It is to bring the industrial purchasing power into line and particularly to aid the vast inarticulate mass of white collar workers, that the present attempt is being made. Meanwhile, efforts were under way to clarify the workings of the plan. The present "agreement," it was explained, is not iron clad but is voluntary and carries no penalties. It is in addition to the regularly ordained code for each industry and will be superseded by these regular codes as soon as each industrial or other organization has adopted one and had it put into effect.

Pittsburgh, July 22.—Former Mayor Charles H. Kline, Pittsburgh, who resigned under fire following his conviction of a misdemeanor count in connection with the purchase of city supplies, died in St. Francis Hospital, here, today. Death was attributed to a paralytic stroke. Death came four months after Kline stepped down from the mayoralty chair in Pennsylvania's second largest metropolis on a plea of ill health, to escape a six months' jail sentence. Physicians agreed he could not have survived the prison term. The end marked "finis" to a career both brilliant and sensational. Kline, a native of Indiana, Pa., had been an accomplished attorney and legislator, and a Republican political power.

BUCKS BANKERS PLAN FARM TOUR EARLY NEXT MONTH

Name Committee to Arrange
Plans for Monday,
August 7th

100 TO PARTICIPATE

Will Also Visit Bowman's Hill and View the Scenery

In co-operation with the agricultural committee on the Bucks County Bankers' Association, County Agent William F. Greenawalt is arranging the Bucks County Bankers' Farm Tour to be held on Monday, August 7. The committee members are W. W. Hurley, chairman, of New Hope; John W. Cooper, of Pineville; Rev. C. B. Weaver, president of the Perkasie National Bank, and S. M. Cressman, of Quakertown.

About a hundred bankers will make this tour which will begin at 1 o'clock. The bankers are asked to assemble at the auction rooms of the Bucks County Producers' Co-operation in Doylestown. The egg auction, as it is more familiarly known, is located in the basement of the Kolbe building, at the corner of West State and Hamilton streets.

Leaving the County Seat the party will journey to Lumberville, where they will visit the orchards of Samuel L. Paxson. Mr. Paxson has devoted more than seventy acres to the raising of apples and peaches, it is stated.

Second stop will be at the farm of William W. Hurley, of New Hope, a pioneer Guernsey cattle breeder in this part of the State. Here the bankers will be given an opportunity to inspect one of the original Guernsey herds in the county.

Mindful of their appetites, the bankers will have their noonday repast at Thompson Memorial Church, near Bowman's Hill. Lunch will be served by the women of Lower Solebury Presbyterian Church.

Following lunch, the party, under the direction of the County Agent, will visit the tower at Bowman's Hill. This tower, a part of the Washington Crossing State Park, will afford the bankers an excellent opportunity to get a glimpse of the Delaware river valley.

From the top of the tower can be seen a panorama of scenic beauty, with the river and canal winding between the hills, which can not be excluded in the Eastern part of the State.

From here the entourage will move to Newtown, where they will visit Indian Rock Game Farm—the owner of which wishes to keep his identity obscure—the last stop for the day.

More than 2000 turkeys, a thousand pheasants and 1500 Mallard ducks will be shown to the guests. For those interested in cavies there will be scores of white rats, mice, guinea pigs and other animals.

This is another of the annual tours sponsored by County Agent Greenawalt. Previous tours were a potato, poultry and dairy, all of which were successful.

Lock Haven To Observe One Hundredth Anniversary

LOCK HAVEN, July 22.—(INS)—Lock Haven will reminiscently flip back the pages of time during the week beginning July 23rd and celebrate her one hundredth anniversary by presenting a colorful pageant and demonstration, depicting the life and hardships of its early settlers.

The centennial observance will open with religious ceremonies in which churches of all denominations will participate. Units of the 103rd Cavalry, Pennsylvania National Guard, will encamp here for a three-day military demonstration.

A feature of the week's program will be a rodeo by the guardsmen. A beauty contest, a fireworks display, ox roast, block party, firemen's festival and historical parade, will also be included. The Clinton County Historical Society will exhibit relics and articles of historical interest.

The pageant, to be presented in three performances on July 23, 24, and 25, will commemorate the actual sale of building lots in Lock Haven by Jerry Church, generally accepted as the founder of the borough, whose land dealings also are remembered in the early history of Williamsport and Lewisburg. He sold his first lots in November, 1832, even before he acquired the title to 200 acres of land which he had purchased as the site of the proposed town.

John B. Quigley, 95, and Henry Nyhart, 92, two natives who can recall the early life of those who contributed to the city's development, will figure prominently in the festivities.

GANGLAND'S CHALLENGE

The sudden flare-up in kidnappings would seem almost to indicate that the underworld has decided to challenge the Federal Government.

It came just as the attorney general was mapping out his war on gangsters and racketeers. In going after this class of law violators, the government's only weapon has been the income tax laws. Capone, the "big shot" of them all, was sent up, and lesser leaders have followed him into prison. But many remain at large, and a complete crushing of these criminals is the government's purpose in its newest drive.

Federal authorities are better equipped to deal with kidnapping than with racketeering because of the new law which makes kidnapping a Federal offense when the abductors cross a state line. With victims now being held by kidnappers in four sections of the United States, there is no lack of material for Federal agents to work on.

State governments have proved themselves to be almost helpless in handling both kidnappings and racketeering. If either crime is to be checked it seems that Uncle Sam will have to do it.

The Senate Committee investigating racketeering has become interested, through its chairman, Senator Copeland, in the kidnappings and has asked the attorney general for Federal assistance in the New York case involving the kidnapping of a nephew of a political leader.

This form of crime is an admittedly hard one to get at effectively. Because of fear for the life of the victim, relatives often refuse to seek police assistance. They can not be justly condemned, of course, for this attitude although it operates to defeat or hamper authorities seeking the kidnappers.

There must be some way for conducting an effective campaign against abductions. It must be found and the drive be pushed to the limit. Gangland cannot be permitted to challenge the Federal Government, as it has state government, and get away with it.

BLONDE MARTYRS

Hydrographic records of changes in humidity at McGill University, Montreal, testify to the martyrdom of several unblonded blondes of that dominion metropolis. There is a personal sacrifice for science.

None but fine golden hairs can be used on the delicate instrument that records hourly changes in humidity. The hair of brunettes is too coarse. So scientists prefer blondes.

Sensitive instruments are not to be condemned for preferring blondes but they are asking a lot in this day of platinum blondes, peroxide blondes, beach blondes and perfect blondes when they demand blonde strands a yard long. And yet the supply seems unlimited.

If there is such a thing as chivalry in science the blondes who keep the hydrograph hydrographic ought to be rewarded. Clear days for jelly making and moonlit nights for love making should be their portion. And if science is grateful it will not delve too deeply and publicly into the possible relationship between the known inconstancy of the weather and the reputed inconstancy of blondes.

Very often a "sound investment" is just a bit of speculation that turned out all right.

Lloyd George Through With Leadership, He Says

By H. K. Reynolds

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
LONDON, July 22—(INS)—David Lloyd George, grand old man of British politics and Britain's most famous living statesman, at seventy years of age is "through with leadership."

He made this confession to the Liberals of Wales, who had appealed to him to lead the British Liberal Party "back to the right course," but at the same time revealed his unshaken faith in those "radical" political policies of which he has been the militant spokesman for half a century.

With his party decimated in the last General Election and his former associates either in the National Government or playing a lone political game of their own, Lloyd George finds it plain enough that Liberalism is passing through a bad time in Great Britain.

The former Premier takes courage, however, from the rise of Liberalism in the United States as exemplified by the election of President Roosevelt, and believes that Liberalism will again sweep the country here "when it shows the same determination and courage as Liberalism in America."

"There never was a greater necessity for Liberalism in the world today," Lloyd George told his Welsh supporters. "When I was young the mere mention of two great words sent a kind of thrill through an assembly. One was 'principle,' but that has not the same pulsating effect at the present moment. The other was 'liberty,' and liberty is off for the moment."

"In Germany, the Liberal Party has gradually disappeared. It has disappeared because it had ceased to have any message for this dire hour in the destiny of mankind. I speak as an old Liberal, but not as an old leader, not as one who desires leadership, but one who has had jolly well enough of it."

"Liberalism in Germany was routed because it had nothing to say to the world which was worth listening to. We were routed in 1931 because, although we had something to say, we tore up our message and flung it to the winds."

"In America the Liberal Party seven months ago absolutely swept the board. It was a Liberal program—the 1929 program of the Liberal Party of this country, a great policy of reconstruction and free trade."

ST. HELENA DESERTED

PARIS—(INS)—There are only about eighty white people left on the little island of Saint Helena where the great Emperor died in exile. The population has greatly declined ever since the East India Company ceased to use the island as a station.

HOLLYWOOD.—In your hands, readers, lies the success or failure of a project dear to the heart of Maurice Chevalier.

The French star wants to get out of the boudoir and to create a permanent character, like Chaplin's pathetic tramp and Harold Lloyd's bashful youth.

He'll introduce this character, whom he describes as a Parisian gamin, in his final Paramount picture, "The Way to Love." The verdict of the fans will be his future guide.

A man, whom Hollywood writers are prone to think of as difficult to talk to, Chevalier unburdened himself freely today. And he told me some surprising things:

"I have never liked the sophisticated characters," he said, "because they are not me. What I want to bring to the screen is the real Chevalier, the one they know in Paris. There I don't play the Menjou type of roles. I am the gamin, the fellow who walks along jauntily, who might be making more money doing something else, but who prefers to take life in his own way."

"He is a character of the people. In Paris, the galleries recognize him as natural and cheer him. But he amuses the fashionable set too. Last year in Cannes, I gave a benefit performance. The charge was $10 a seat, which was a lot of money even for Cannes. But they crowded in. They like me because I was natural—I was not trying to imitate one of them."

Chevalier expects to sign within the next few days to make "The Merry Widow" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The role of Prince Danilo, of course, will not be along the new lines. The French star admits he will do some of the old type of stories. For instance, if Lubitsch, whom he likes, gets the right vehicle. But his heart is set on creating the gamin.

"When I play a prince," he said, "I'm acting. I want to be myself."

HOLLYWOOD PARADE:

Numerous inquiries have been received since Pickfair went on sale, and serious negotiations are now on with a prospective purchaser who is not of the film business. Not only the house but many of the furnishings are being offered. Real estate men advertise that the property will not be shown unless satisfactory financial credentials are produced. Otherwise, the place would have been a sideshow since the proposed separation of Mary and Doug was announced.

Claudette Colbert got only a telephone goodbye from Norman Foster when he left for Honolulu. But she says it was because he suddenly discovered that the boat sailed a day before he thought. Come December and Claudette hopes to be taking a trip herself to Europe. She says Norman will accompany her—if he can get away.

Charlie Chaplin still promises studio employees that he will start his picture in about a month. They seem skeptical, however. The comedian spends most of his time on his 55 foot cruiser "the Panacea." On the less crowded nights, he and Paulette Goddard slip into the Cocoanut Grove. Richard Dix has just had a birthday. They gave him a party on the set. . . . And the latest star to buy a ranch is Baby Leroy. His mother just got it for him.

DID YOU KNOW—

That Wallace Beery once starred in a series of pictures made in Japan and can carry on a limited conversation in that language?

SYNOPSIS

Attending the premiere at her latest motion picture, beautiful Leni Luneska, the star, is confronted by a shabby, emaciated man, who emerges from the crowd crying, "Leni! It is I, Karl Kruger. Do you want me to tell the whole world?" Leni turns white. She tells the man she will talk with him inside, Lucky Cavanaugh, a gambler, fascinated by Leni's beauty, saunters into the theatre after Kruger. He prevents Kruger from making a scene and has him placed in a private office until after the show. Cavanaugh then bribes an usher to seat him in Leni's box. During the performance Douglas Gates, Leni's elderly escort, proposes to her. She is tempted to accept him to get away from everything. In the office next to Kruger's, thieves are robbing the safe. Leni leaves her box and goes to Kruger. He taunts her with, "It is not pleasant to have a star's bum hanging around—not when he happens to be your husband!"

CHAPTER FOUR

"I thought you were in prison," she said, forcing her voice to calmness. "Did you escape?"

"Unfortunately for you, I have a full pardon—for good conduct," said Kruger with satisfaction. "No chance to railroad me back to that place."

He was thin as a scarecrow and the light in his eyes was feverish. In comparison with the groomed and confident men of her present life, Kruger was but a human animal in ruin. He was here to be smirched her joy of life, but Leni unconsciously showed pity as well as revulsion in her face.

"You will want money, of course," she said slowly. "That was what you always wanted. Very well. An arrangement can be made. I give you my word. Will you go now? Tomorrow I will talk with you at my home."

Kruger laughed outright. "You seem to forget—I'm still your husband."

The violet color of Leni's eyes darkened almost to black. Very slowly the coldness of her breast was beginning to melt against a spreading flame she struggled to suppress.

"For what you did to me you should have been killed," she told him. Each word came like a drop of molten metal out of her tight throat. "Fourteen years old—a factory child in Vienna—Yes, you married me, Karl Kruger. You took me to Berlin and London—and what did you make of me? Heaven help you! They will build a special inferno for men like you!"

Kruger started to rise, a red flush mottling his forehead. As he raised his hand he called her an epithet in German. But he did not strike her.

"Don't forget—you are what they call a criminal alien!" he cried out. "I can have you deported if I like. If the public knew why you spent six months behind the bars in Wormwood Scrubs—you wouldn't be much of a star, hey? You wouldn't like your record paraded, hey? Queens of the screen can't stand publicity like that. Not I know all about these morality clauses. Women like you can't stand scandal and disgrace—not when it's true. I think you'll listen to me, my famous Leni Luneska! Oh, yes—you'll be reasonable!"

Leni's hands were clenched. "Just what do you want?" she asked intently.

"They showed pictures every Friday night in the penitentiary," Kruger rushed on. "Lots of times I'd see you on the screen in small parts. I watched your rise—I knew you'd be a star some day. No other woman had your hair and eyes and skin. . . . In my cell I'd sulk at night and dream about you—you! His voice rose crescendo. "I'll tell you what I want—I want my wife!"

Leni paused for a long time before speaking to Kruger. Curiously enough, he did not gaze at her face but at her graceful hands with their long tapering fingers. The man was not without a certain poetic imagination. Her hands always reminded him of white lilies.

"You are not my husband," she said. Green glints were now showing in her eyes. "That marriage in Vienna meant nothing I was under age."

Kruger threw a hand in the air. "Under age or not, it's legal. But if not legal—then you lived with me. I tell you I can ruin you—destroy you—drive you from the films. Nobody can shut my mouth."

"You do not frighten me," Leni lied.

But Kruger saw that she was pale across her cheek bones, that the graceful hands trembled.

"All the same you will listen to me," he told her with his voice on its high, unnatural level. "I know you well enough—your vanity and your ambition. You love the spotlight—and you will listen to reason. Are you fool enough to throw everything away? Not Leni Luneska! I'm your husband. You will accept me as such. Let the past bury its own dead."

"That is only a threat," said Leni contemptuously. "What you really want is the money."

"Certainly I want money!" cried Kruger. "All of my life I've been poor as a rat. But I've been starved in prison. I've been starved for a woman to crush in my arms. More than money, I've wanted a woman. You—Leni Luneska—my wife! You belong to me and I'm going to have you!"

His voice was almost a scream. The two burglars in the next office heard the sound of it, but could not distinguish the words. The lower tones of Leni also reached their ears.

"That guy in there is sure giving it to some dame," one of the burglars whispered.

The other answered him carelessly. "Yeah—some guys is like that."

Kruger and Leni now stood facing each other, throwing words like missiles. His face was flushed a dark red and drops of perspiration sprang on his bluish upper lip. Leni's face was completely white. Her lips were drained of blood and the rouge on her cheeks was almost grotesque in its artificiality.

She had known hate before, but never on this earth had something in her heart thirsted to kill. Had it been in her power she would have destroyed Karl Kruger utterly. Not because he had it in his power to wreck her career. Because he was himself—because of a blinding disgust for the man's repulsive physical self she would have obliterated him from human existence.

Each nerve in her body strummed like over-stretched wires. Shuddering revulsion swept through her, nauseated her, sent red flashes darting through her eyeballs.

And behind it all, deep in the very pit of her being was a cold sickening feeling, a clammy weakness of the heart that consumed all the strength in her body. When she spoke, her voice was a husky whisper.

"There are a dozen men I know who would wring your neck if I asked them to," she said.

Suddenly he stepped forward in front of her, his dark hands with their bent fingers raised to the level of her white throat.

"And I could strangle the life out of you right here," he said. He was so wrought up that his whole face was twitching.

The truth of the matter was that in any physical combat he probably would have been unequal to Leni Luneska. He was a small man and undernourished. This thought flashed through her mind and she was able to laugh at him derisively.

"You haven't the strength, and you haven't the courage," she told him, gaining better control of herself. "No, Karl Kruger, you are not what we call in Hollywood—the type. You are only a blackmailer. I'm a fool to let you get my goat."

Her words, oddly, seemed to soothe him. He took out a handkerchief and wiped his forehead.

"We are both fools," he said, striving for poise. "A matter like this cannot be settled when two people are angry. All the same, I put my foot down and will not accept less than I have demanded. You are smart enough to realize that you must come to terms."

"How much?" she demanded crisply.

"Recognition as your husband—and all that goes with it."

She looked at him steadily and shook her head. "Not if it meant my death."

The fire in his eyes began to grow again with disorderly intensity.

"I'll tell you something you do not realize, Leni Luneska. I'm a far more desperate man than you think. My life is not worth the flame at the end of a candle. With me it's either nothing or everything. I may go down to ruin, but I'll drag you with me. Still, I'm reasonable. We are both excited. I'll give you one hour to think it over. Go away before we start clawing again. Come back in an hour and tell me if you are willing to make terms."

It was a truce for Leni, but not a victory. Karl Kruger had spoken the truth—his life was valueless. In the final extremity the recklessness of a coward equals that of a hero. His brain was hysterical, likely to override whatever intelligence he possessed. For the moment she decided it was the part of wisdom to delay.

"Very well, I'll think it over," she said deliberately. "I'll come back in an hour and we will settle everything."

As she left the room and closed the door behind her, her legs felt stiff, her knees rusty. There was one thought in her mind that sang a hideous song. There were men in the city—she had read of them—who would kill a fellow being for a few hundred dollars. Assassins . . .

Lucky Cavanaugh's interest in motion pictures was so slight that he could scarcely explain his presence in the theater. It had been a whim that brought him to the premiere—yet something deeper than a vagrant impulse.

A hunch, perhaps. Leni Luneska was a hunch, too.

His eyes followed her every movement on the screen. She awoke an odd emotion within him—not desire—rather a sensation of suspense.

Of one thing he was certain—he was not in the least impressed by her fame. He was conscious of no barrier. Beautiful women were not exactly a novelty in his life. In the East at Saratoga, at Belmont and Bowie and Bradley's in Palm Beach lovely creatures were a part of the game—were really the pursuers.

Without eavesdropping, Cavanaugh had heard a part of the conversation between Leni and Douglas Gates. Enough to tell him that Gates would get nowhere with the blonde actress. Here, too, intuition played its part in his opinion.

Why did you buy this NEWSPAPER?

SUPPOSING that, beginning tomorrow, all the newspapers are discontinued. What a furore the public would make. "News! News! We must have news or we will be no better off than the ancients." All right, suppose we give them news but cut out the advertisements.

Then you would discover that politics, the doings of society, notices of fires, accidents, deaths, scandals, sports, the activities of the police and criminals add little or nothing to the real comfort and happiness of this greatest age in the world's history.

Advertising is the NEWS of all the looms, of all the furnaces, of all the laboratories, of all the shops, of all the stores, of all the world, and all working for you.

Because of advertising, luxuries and necessities that once cost a king's ransom are yours at little prices. Advertising pits merchant against merchant, artisan against artisan, producer against producer, for your benefit, forcing out the best there is in everything and telling the world about it.

Read advertising. Keep abreast of today. Advertising furnishes you with facts and opportunities that otherwise you would never know.

MANY STRIPES FOR NEW FASHION CREATE A COLORFUL EFFECT

PARIS—(INS)—Stripes strike a very smart note for summer chic and the smartest part about them is their entry into the evening salon.

Black net striped in silver is going into some lovely evening dresses at Kargere's in the avenue des Champs Elysees and promises to remain in for the winter.

To wear with them, this designer has created some striking net stockings to match with the same silver stripes. Other stunning color combinations come for this striped net, such as dull blue and gold, orange and rust, old-rose and gray.

Florence Walton wore a gray and black striped organdie from Lucien Leong's at her recent wedding to Pierre Colombier in the little village church at Landy on a fine June day. A little white organdie cape and capeline accompanied it. Her sister-in-law wore blue and white striped organdie made on the same lines.

Black and white Laqueline, Al-bene's newest tissue, make a lovely striped summer evening gown, with red waxed volubilis at the corsage and little cape-sleeves on the shoulders.

For afternoon there is an artificial silk ottoman striped blue and white with buttons on and below the belt-line.

Stripes make any number of the nicest new beach-dresses in cotton pique and linen. "Big House" is Len-ief's version in shantung striped white and green, while Regny uses knitted striped stockinet for her smart pull-overs and Lanvin sports little striped beach-ropes.

Striped scarves accompany costumes in plain colors and toques and gloves go likewise.

Majorca No Paradise for Her

When Mr. and Mrs. Clinton B. Lockwood, of Springfield, Mass., read that the island of Majorca (or Mallorca) in the Mediterranean was a "new Paradise" where one could live in luxury for a dollar a day, they, as have many Americans, hid themselves there. After six weeks in jail awaiting trial on the charge of striking a civil guard the Lockwoods and three American friends, likewise imprisoned, have opinions of their own. Only the intercession of Uncle Sam effected their release pending trial.

American Woman Found Majorca Far From Paradise

MADRID, July 21.—"Paradise lost."

This is what expatriates from the states are calling Majorca, the beautiful Spanish island in the Mediterranean since the international imbroglio there, in which four American men and one woman were tossed into durance vile where they remained for six weeks to repent of their misdeemeanor.

The five unhappy Yanks are: Mr. and Mrs. Clinton B. Lockwood of Springfield, Mass.; Rutherford Fulbertson, Columbus, O.; Roderick F. Mead, New York City, and Edmund W. Blodgett, Stamford, Conn.

It seems that the quintette engaged in an altercation in which a Spanish civil guard was struck. So what? Well, they were marched off to prison and kept there over forty days without benefit of trial.

Recently Ambassador Claude G. Bowers appealed to the Spanish Government to intervene in the matter and a trial has been promised.

All this has come as a terrific shock to those Americans who like to live in quaint, old places and observe folk ways and customs. For, a couple of years ago, following the commercialization of Paris as a tourist center, and the exploitation of Bali, Majorca was hailed by arty folk as the one spot on the globe where one could live and be happy on one dollar a day.

But as soon as the news came out, the rush was on. Americans streamed into the place, hired all the villas and started to drink up all the wine and spirits on the island.

The natives, instead of being grateful for the money the visitors brought with them, bitterly resented the invasion of their peaceful island.

They want to be left alone and when a civil guard was struck in a fight they thought the insult was the last straw.

Not only were the five Yankees cast into a hot and uncomfortable prison but Theodore Pratt, an American writer, was much harassed because of an article he wrote about the island.

The Islanders rioted against him and it is now said he will be brought to trial on some charge or other. So violent is the feeling against Pratt that the Majorca authorities have thought it best to assign him guards.

No wonder that Majorca is now called by the playboys and girls along the Riviera "Ex-Paradise."
